The Genesis of a Comedy Partnership: From The D Generation to Working Dog

The story of Rob Sitch and Jane Kennedy's comedic journey is intrinsically linked to the Melbourne-based production house, Working Dog Productions. Founded in 1993 by Sitch, Santo Cilauro, Tom Gleisner, and later joined by Kennedy, Working Dog quickly became a breeding ground for some of Australia's most beloved and intelligent comedy. But before Working Dog solidified its legendary status, the seeds of this partnership were sown in the chaotic and brilliant world of The D Generation.

The D Generation: Igniting a Comedy Revolution

For those who grew up in the late 1980s and early 1990s, The D Generation was an essential watch. This groundbreaking sketch comedy show, airing on ABC, introduced a new generation of Australian comedians, including Rob Sitch, Jane Kennedy, Michael Veitch, Tony Martin, and Mick Molloy. The show was known for its sharp, often political, and incredibly witty sketches that tackled everything from current affairs to everyday life. Sitch, with his dry delivery and impeccable timing, and Kennedy, with her versatile character work and infectious energy, were already standouts, laying the groundwork for their future collaborations.

The chemistry between the cast was palpable, and the show's success demonstrated a hunger for intelligent, homegrown comedy. It was here that Sitch and Kennedy honed their craft, learning from each other and developing a shared comedic sensibility that would define their careers. The experience of The D Generation was a formative one, providing a launchpad for the ambitious projects that would follow.

The Birth of Working Dog Productions: Crafting Iconic Shows

Following the success of The D Generation, the core members, along with Jane Kennedy, decided to form their own production company: Working Dog Productions. This move allowed them greater creative control and the freedom to develop their own distinctive brand of humour. Working Dog became synonymous with high-quality, intelligent comedy, and their early projects immediately garnered critical acclaim and commercial success.

Their first major venture, Frontline, was a satirical mockumentary that skewered the world of television current affairs. Rob Sitch starred as the earnest but clueless host, Mike Adams, while Jane Kennedy played the ambitious and often ruthless producer, Tracey free. The show was a masterclass in observational comedy, dissecting the superficiality and sensationalism that can permeate media. The on-screen dynamic between Sitch and Kennedy in Frontline was electric, hinting at the powerful synergy they would continue to explore.

Rob Sitch: The Master of Satire and Observational Humour

Rob Sitch is a name synonymous with intelligent Australian comedy. His dry wit, understated delivery, and uncanny ability to find humour in the mundane have made him a beloved figure. As a writer, actor, and producer, Sitch has been instrumental in shaping the comedic landscape, consistently delivering shows that are both hilarious and thought-provoking.

Early Career and The D Generation

As mentioned, Sitch was a key player in The D Generation, where his talent for characterisation and sharp writing began to shine. His deadpan delivery of absurd lines became a signature. This early exposure laid the foundation for his later success in creating and starring in his own projects.

Frontline: A Mockumentary Masterpiece

Frontline, co-created by Sitch, remains one of Australia's most celebrated comedy series. Sitch's portrayal of Mike Adams was a brilliant send-up of television personalities, capturing the aspirational yet ultimately hollow nature of some media figures. The show's success cemented Working Dog's reputation for producing cutting-edge satire.

The Dish: A Celebration of Australian Ingenuity

Beyond sketch comedy and satire, Rob Sitch also proved his talent for storytelling in the critically acclaimed film The Dish (2000). Starring as Cliff Buxton, the deputy director of the Parkes Observatory, Sitch led a stellar cast in this heartwarming and humorous account of Australia's role in the Apollo 11 moon landing. The film celebrated Australian ingenuity, resilience, and a good dose of quirky humour, showcasing Sitch's ability to blend comedy with genuine emotion. It was a significant moment, demonstrating his range beyond his more cynical satirical work.

Utopia: The Modern Office Satire

Perhaps Rob Sitch's most enduring legacy in recent times is the ABC series Utopia. Again, Sitch not only stars as the earnest and often bewildered Nation Building Authority CEO, Tony Woodford, but also co-writes and produces the series. Utopia is a masterful dissection of bureaucratic inefficiency, corporate jargon, and the often-futile attempts to create positive change in a world bogged down by process. Sitch's character, Tony, is the perfect embodiment of the well-meaning individual caught in a labyrinth of red tape. The show's keen observations on modern work life, the absurdity of meetings, and the disconnect between intention and execution have resonated deeply with audiences, making it a cultural touchstone for understanding the modern workplace.

Jane Kennedy: Versatility and Unforgettable Characters

Jane Kennedy is a powerhouse of Australian comedy, renowned for her incredible versatility, sharp comedic timing, and ability to inhabit a vast range of characters. From the ruthless producer of Frontline to the unflustered matriarch in Kath & Kim, Kennedy has consistently delivered memorable performances that have endeared her to audiences.

From The D Generation to Frontline

Kennedy's journey began with The D Generation, where she showcased her early comedic prowess. Her move to Frontline as Tracey free was a significant step, demonstrating her talent for portraying complex, ambitious characters. Tracey was a force to be reckoned with, and Kennedy's performance was a perfect blend of cunning and comedic exasperation.

Kath & Kim: A Cultural Phenomenon

While not a creator of the show, Jane Kennedy played a pivotal role in the success of Kath & Kim, one of Australia's most iconic television comedies. As the mother of the perpetually glamorous (in her own mind) Kath Day-Knight, Kelda, Kennedy brought a unique brand of dry humour and suburban realism to the series. Her interactions with the main cast were always a highlight, and her deadpan delivery perfectly complemented the show's distinct brand of observational comedy.

Agony and The Pool: Expanding Her Creative Horizons

Beyond her acting roles, Jane Kennedy has also established herself as a successful producer. She was instrumental in the creation and production of shows like The Agony of Life and The Agony of Modern Families, where she, along with Santo Cilauro and Tom Gleisner, explored societal trends and modern dilemmas with their signature blend of wit and insightful commentary. She also produced The Pool, a documentary exploring the importance of public swimming pools in Australia, showcasing her ability to engage with diverse subject matter.

Kennedy's work often showcases a deep understanding of human nature, and she has a remarkable ability to find the humour in the everyday struggles and triumphs of ordinary people. Her performances are always nuanced and authentic, making her characters relatable and unforgettable.

Shared Comedic Vision

Working under the Working Dog banner has allowed Sitch and Kennedy to cultivate a shared comedic vision. They understand each other's rhythms, their strengths, and their comedic instincts. This mutual understanding translates into seamless performances and deeply resonant humour. Their work often critiques societal norms and human behaviour, but it's always done with an underlying warmth and intelligence.

Utopia and the Power of Their Partnership

Utopia, in particular, highlights the strength of their enduring partnership. As the central figures navigating the absurdities of the Nation Building Authority, their characters, Tony Woodford (Sitch) and Rhonda (Kennedy), often find themselves at the forefront of the show's most hilarious and poignant moments. Kennedy's portrayal of Rhonda, the pragmatic and often exasperated assistant, provides a perfect foil to Sitch's naive optimism. Their interactions are a masterclass in comedic timing and character development, showcasing their ability to build a compelling and funny world together.
