From Whimpers to Woofs: Your Comprehensive Guide to Stopping Puppy Crying

Bringing home a new puppy is an incredibly exciting time! Those tiny paws, wet nose, and boundless energy can fill your home with joy. But let's be honest, it's not all cuddles and belly rubs. One of the most common challenges new puppy parents face is the puppy crying. Whether it's at night, when left alone, or just seemingly out of the blue, those plaintive cries can tug at your heartstrings and leave you wondering what on earth to do.

This article is your ultimate guide to understanding why your puppy is crying and, more importantly, how to help them settle down and feel secure. We'll cover everything from identifying the root cause of their distress to implementing effective strategies that foster a calm and happy puppy. So, take a deep breath, grab a cup of coffee (or a chew toy for your pup!), and let's dive into the world of puppy crying solutions.

Understanding Why Your Puppy Cries

Before we can effectively address puppy crying, we need to understand why they're doing it. Puppies, like human babies, communicate their needs through vocalizations. Crying is their primary way of telling you something isn't quite right. It's a sign of distress, discomfort, or unmet needs. Ignoring it won't make it go away; instead, it can lead to a more anxious and unhappy puppy. Let's break down the most common reasons:

1. Separation Anxiety and Loneliness

This is arguably the biggest culprit behind puppy crying, especially in the initial days and weeks. Your puppy has just been ripped away from their mother and siblings, their familiar environment, and everything they've ever known. Suddenly, they're in a strange new place, surrounded by unfamiliar smells and sounds, with you as their only companion. It's a massive adjustment!

The crying you hear is their way of saying, "Where did everyone go? I'm alone and I'm scared!" This is particularly common at night when the house goes quiet and they're left to sleep alone, often in a crate. Puppy crying at night is a signal that they're feeling vulnerable and seeking comfort.

2. Needing to Potty

Young puppies have small bladders and limited bladder control. They can't hold it for long, and they haven't yet learned the house-training cues. If your puppy is crying, especially after waking up, after playing, or after eating, it's a strong indicator that they need to go outside to relieve themselves. Ignoring this can lead to accidents indoors and frustration for both of you. This is a crucial aspect of puppy potty training management.

3. Hunger or Thirst

Just like us, puppies need regular meals and access to fresh water. If your puppy's feeding schedule is off, or if their water bowl is empty, they'll let you know! A hungry or thirsty puppy will often whine or cry to get your attention and signal their discomfort.

4. Discomfort or Pain

This is a more serious reason for puppy crying, but it's important to consider. Is your puppy experiencing pain? This could be due to teething, an injury, an upset stomach, or even an underlying medical condition. If the crying is sudden, persistent, and accompanied by other symptoms like lethargy, loss of appetite, or limping, it's crucial to consult your veterinarian immediately. Puppy pain crying needs professional attention.

5. Overstimulation or Boredom

Puppies are bundles of energy and curiosity. They need mental and physical stimulation. If they're overstimulated by too much noise, activity, or interaction, they can become overwhelmed and start to cry. Conversely, if they're bored and not getting enough exercise or playtime, they can also become restless and vocal. Finding the right balance is key to calming a crying puppy.

6. Seeking Attention

Sometimes, puppies learn that crying gets them what they want – your attention! If you rush to your puppy every single time they whine, even if they don't have a genuine need, they'll quickly learn that crying is an effective way to get you to interact with them. This can become a learned behavior that's hard to break. Understanding how to ignore puppy crying when it's attention-seeking is a vital skill.

Effective Strategies for Stopping Puppy Crying

Now that we've explored the "why," let's focus on the "how." Here are some tried-and-true methods to help your puppy feel secure and minimize crying:

1. Establish a Predictable Routine

Puppies thrive on routine. A predictable schedule for feeding, potty breaks, playtime, training, and sleep will help your puppy feel secure and understand what to expect. This predictability reduces anxiety and uncertainty, which are major contributors to crying. Aim for consistency in wake-up times, mealtimes, and bedtime.

2. Gradual Introduction to Alone Time

This is crucial for combating separation anxiety. Don't expect your puppy to be okay with being left alone for hours on their first day. Start small:

1. Short Absences: Begin by leaving your puppy alone for just a few minutes. Step out the door, close it, and come back before they have a chance to get too upset.
2. Increase Duration Slowly: Gradually increase the amount of time you're gone. If your puppy handles 5 minutes well, try 10, then 15, and so on.
3. Make Departures and Arrivals Low-Key: Avoid overly emotional goodbyes or hellos. This can heighten your puppy's anxiety. Keep it calm and casual.
4. Provide Distractions: Leave them with a favorite chew toy or a puzzle feeder filled with treats to keep them occupied and happy while you're away.

This gradual desensitization is key to puppy coping with being alone.

3. Crate Training: A Safe Haven, Not a Punishment

Crate training can be an invaluable tool for managing puppy crying, especially at night. The crate should be a comfortable, safe den for your puppy, not a place of punishment. When done correctly, it can significantly reduce puppy crying in crate.

1. Make it Inviting: Line the crate with soft bedding and place familiar-smelling items inside.
2. Positive Associations: Feed your puppy meals in the crate and toss treats inside for them to find.
3. Short Stays: Start with short periods of time in the crate while you're home.
4. Nighttime Routine: Place the crate in your bedroom initially so your puppy can hear and smell you. This can ease their transition and reduce nighttime crying.

Remember, the goal is for the crate to be a positive and secure space, not a source of distress.

4. Consistent Potty Training

Addressing the need to potty is paramount. Regular potty breaks are essential:

1. Frequent Trips: Take your puppy out first thing in the morning, last thing at night, after waking up from naps, after playing, and after eating.
2. Praise and Reward: Lavishly praise and offer a small treat when they eliminate in the designated spot.

3. Learn the Signs: Watch for cues like sniffing, circling, or whining – these often indicate they need to go.

This proactive approach to puppy potty training and crying will save you a lot of accidents and frustration.

5. Ensure Physical and Mental Stimulation

A tired puppy is a good puppy! Make sure your puppy is getting enough exercise and mental engagement.

1. Age-Appropriate Exercise: Short, frequent play sessions and walks are ideal for young puppies.
2. Puzzle Toys and Games: Interactive toys, treat-dispensing puzzles, and basic obedience training sessions can keep their minds sharp and prevent boredom.
3. Socialization: Safely introduce your puppy to new people, places, and other vaccinated dogs (once your vet gives the okay) to build their confidence.

A well-exercised and mentally stimulated puppy is less likely to cry out of boredom or pent-up energy.

6. Don't Reward Crying for Attention

This can be the hardest part, but it's crucial for long-term success. If you're confident your puppy's needs are met (they've been fed, watered, pottied, and aren't in pain), you need to learn to ignore attention-seeking cries.

1. Wait for Quiet: Only offer attention, praise, or treats when your puppy is quiet.
2. Be Patient: It might get worse before it gets better as your puppy tests the boundaries. Stay consistent!
3. Redirect: If they're crying for attention, try to redirect their energy to a toy or a training exercise.

This is the essence of managing puppy attention-seeking cries.

7. Comfort and Reassurance (When Appropriate)

While you don't want to reward excessive crying, there are times when your puppy genuinely needs comfort. If they're scared by a loud noise, are feeling unwell, or are going through a significant adjustment, a gentle word, a calm pet, or a reassuring presence can be beneficial. The key is to differentiate between genuine distress and attention-seeking behavior.

8. Consider a "Puppy Sounds" Companion

For some puppies, especially those struggling with nighttime loneliness, a stuffed animal that emits a heartbeat sound or a gentle ticking clock can provide a sense of comfort and mimic the presence of littermates. These "anxiety aids" can be surprisingly effective in reducing puppy separation anxiety crying.

When to Seek Professional Help

While most puppy crying can be resolved with patience, consistency, and the right strategies, there are instances when you should consult a professional.

Veterinary Consultation

If your puppy's crying is sudden, intense, persistent, or accompanied by any other concerning symptoms (lethargy, vomiting, diarrhea, loss of appetite, limping), it's essential to rule out any underlying medical issues. Your veterinarian can diagnose and treat any health problems that might be causing their distress. Don't hesitate to reach out if you suspect puppy health issues causing crying.

Professional Dog Trainer or Behaviorist

If you've tried various strategies and are still struggling with excessive puppy crying, particularly if you suspect severe separation anxiety, a certified professional dog trainer or behaviorist can provide tailored advice and guidance. They can assess your puppy's individual behavior and help you implement a personalized training plan.

The Takeaway: Patience is Key

Dealing with a crying puppy can be exhausting and emotionally draining. Remember that your puppy is learning and adjusting, just like you are. The key to success lies in patience, consistency, and understanding their needs. By implementing the strategies outlined in this guide, you can help your puppy feel safe, secure, and loved, transforming those plaintive whimpers into happy woofs.

Celebrate the small victories, be kind to yourself, and enjoy the journey of raising a well-adjusted and happy canine companion. You've got this!

Understanding Puppy Crying: Causes and Emotional Significance

Puppy crying is a natural and essential form of communication in young dogs, reflecting their physical needs, emotional states, or environmental responses. From the tender first weeks after birth, a puppy's cry serves as its primary way to express hunger, discomfort, fear, or loneliness. As a pet owner, recognizing these vocal cues is the first step toward addressing them effectively. While crying may seem distressing, it's important to view it not as a behavioral problem but as a vital signal that requires thoughtful attention. Understanding the underlying causes—whether hunger, anxiety, illness, or separation distress—allows for a compassionate and targeted approach that strengthens the bond between puppy and caregiver.

Identifying the Root Causes of Crying

Puppy crying can stem from a variety of sources, each requiring a different strategy to resolve. Hunger is one of the most common triggers, especially in younger puppies who rely on regular feeding schedules. When the stomach is empty, a puppy's cry is sharp and insistent, clearly communicating its need for nourishment. Overheating or physical discomfort, such as a sore belly or teething pain, can also prompt crying, often accompanied by whimpering or restlessness. Equally important is emotional distress, particularly separation anxiety, which may manifest as persistent crying when left alone. Puppies thrive on companionship, and being separated from their littermates or owners can trigger intense separation-related vocalizations. Additionally, environmental factors like unfamiliar noises, new spaces, or sudden changes in routine can unsettle a young dog, leading to anxious cries. Accurately identifying the cause is essential, as mismanaging the root issue often worsens the crying rather than stopping it.

Effective Strategies to Reduce and Stop Puppy Crying

Addressing puppy crying begins with consistent, empathetic care rooted in understanding. For hunger-related crying, establishing a predictable feeding schedule aligned with veterinary guidelines ensures the puppy receives adequate nutrition without overfeeding. Keeping the sleeping area warm and safe helps alleviate discomfort, especially during teething phases when sore gums cause frequent whining. To soothe anxiety, gradual desensitization to separation is key—starting with short absences and slowly increasing duration while pairing departures with positive reinforcement like treats or toys. Creating a calm, predictable environment reduces sensory overload, helping the puppy feel secure. Playtime and interactive activities before separation build emotional resilience, making alone time less stressful. Voice and touch cues also play a role: a gentle, reassuring tone and calm petting can signal safety and comfort. In cases of prolonged distress, consulting a veterinarian is crucial to rule out health issues, while veterinary behaviorists offer specialized guidance for deep-seated anxiety. These interventions, when applied consistently, create a foundation for reduced crying and stronger emotional well-being.

Long-Term Benefits of Proactive Crying Management

Effectively managing puppy crying yields profound long-term benefits, shaping not only behavioral outcomes but also the quality of the human-puppy relationship. By responding promptly and thoughtfully to cries, owners foster trust and security, laying the groundwork for a confident, well-adjusted adult dog. Reducing anxiety through early intervention helps prevent chronic separation anxiety, a condition that can lead to destructive behaviors, excessive barking, or even self-harm. Furthermore, consistent and compassionate care enhances emotional intelligence in puppies, enabling them to navigate social interactions with people and other animals more calmly. As puppies grow into well-socialized adults, their early experiences with responsive caregiving influence their temperament and adaptability in new environments. This proactive approach also strengthens the bond between pet and owner, transforming moments of distress into opportunities for connection and mutual understanding.

Future Outlook: Innovations and Evolving Approaches in Puppy Well-Being

The future of puppy crying management is shaped by advancing knowledge in animal behavior, technology, and holistic care. Emerging research into canine communication continues to deepen our understanding of subtle vocal and body language cues, enabling more precise and empathetic responses. Technological innovations, such as smart collars that detect stress through heart rate variability, offer real-time insights into a puppy's emotional state, allowing owners to intervene before crying escalates. At the same time, the growing emphasis on positive reinforcement training and enrichment programs promotes proactive mental stimulation and emotional resilience, reducing the likelihood of prolonged distress. Veterinary science is also advancing, with new behavioral therapies and targeted interventions improving outcomes for puppies prone to anxiety. As societal awareness of animal welfare rises, owners are increasingly seeking compassionate, evidence-based approaches that prioritize well-being over quick fixes. This shift underscores a broader commitment to nurturing healthy, emotionally balanced dogs—animals who thrive not just in obedience, but in joy and security.

Understanding Why Puppies Cry: The Root Causes of Puppy Distress

Before we can effectively address puppy crying, it's essential to understand why they are crying. Puppies, especially those newly separated from their mothers and littermates, are experiencing a significant life change. Their vocalizations are their primary way of expressing a range of emotions and needs. Identifying the underlying reason is the first step towards providing appropriate comfort and training.

Separation Anxiety and Loneliness

One of the most prevalent reasons for puppy crying is separation anxiety. Puppies have never been alone before; their entire existence has been surrounded by their mother and siblings. When you bring them into a new, quiet environment, they feel abandoned and insecure. This loneliness can manifest as persistent crying, especially when left unattended, even for short periods. Understanding the concept of separation anxiety in puppies is key to addressing this common hurdle.

Basic Needs: Hunger, Thirst, and the Urge to Potty

Just like human babies, puppies have fundamental needs that, if unmet, will lead to distress. A hungry or thirsty puppy will cry to signal their discomfort. Equally important is their need to relieve themselves. Young puppies have very little bladder and bowel control and often need to go outside every couple of hours, or after waking up, eating, or playing. Crying can be a sign that they need to go potty, and if not addressed promptly, can lead to accidents indoors.

Discomfort and Pain

While less common than loneliness or unmet needs, physical discomfort or pain can also cause a puppy to cry. This could be due to teething pain, an upset stomach, an injury, or any underlying medical condition. If your puppy's crying is accompanied by other symptoms like lethargy, lack of appetite, vomiting, or diarrhea, it's crucial to consult your veterinarian immediately to rule out any health issues. Recognizing signs of illness is a critical part of puppy healthcare.

Overstimulation and Fatigue

Puppies are bundles of energy, but they can also be easily overstimulated and become overtired. A new environment with lots of new sights, sounds, and smells can be overwhelming. Similarly, excessive play or training sessions without adequate rest can lead to a tired puppy who cries out of exhaustion and frustration. This is why establishing a consistent puppy routine is so vital.

Seeking Attention and Boredom

While it's important to respond to your puppy's needs, some crying can be a learned behavior aimed at getting your attention. If your puppy learns that crying always results in you coming to them, they may start to use it as a tool to get you to play, offer treats, or simply interact. Boredom can also be a trigger. A puppy with pent-up energy and no outlets for it will often cry out of frustration.

Strategies for Soothing a Crying Puppy: Immediate Relief and Long-Term Solutions

Now that we've explored the common reasons behind puppy crying, let's dive into practical, effective strategies to help your puppy feel secure and comfortable. Remember, patience and consistency are your most valuable tools.

Creating a Safe and Comfortable Environment

The first few days and weeks are crucial for helping your puppy adjust. Focus on making their new space feel secure and inviting.

The Puppy Crate: A Den of Security

A well-introduced crate can be a sanctuary for your puppy. It mimics the den-like environment they are accustomed to and provides a sense of security. The key is positive crate training. Never use the crate as a punishment. Start with short periods, placing treats and toys inside, and gradually increase the duration. A comfortable crate for your puppy should be just large enough for them to stand up, turn around, and lie down comfortably. Adding a soft blanket or a familiar-smelling item (like a t-shirt worn by you) can further enhance their sense of security.

Establishing a Den-like Space

Even if you're not using a crate, designate a specific "den" area for your puppy. This could be a corner of a room with a comfortable bed, a playpen, or a gated-off section. Make this space appealing with soft bedding, safe chew toys, and fresh water. Ensure this area is quiet and away from high-traffic areas where they might feel overwhelmed.

Temperature and Comfort

Ensure your puppy's environment is at a comfortable temperature. Young puppies can't regulate their body temperature as effectively as adult dogs. If they are cold, they may cry. Consider a self-warming mat or a heat pad (specifically designed for pets) if the room is particularly chilly.

Addressing Basic Needs Promptly

This might seem obvious, but ensuring your puppy's fundamental needs are met is paramount to reducing crying.

Potty Training Essentials

Establish a consistent potty schedule. Take your puppy out first thing in the morning, after every meal, after naps, and before bedtime. When you take them outside, use a specific potty command and praise them enthusiastically when they eliminate. If you hear whining from your puppy, it's often a cue that they need to go outside. Promptly taking them out can prevent accidents and teach them where to relieve themselves. Learn more about puppy potty training best practices.

Feeding and Hydration

Feed your puppy a high-quality puppy food at regular intervals. Ensure they always have access to fresh, clean water. If your puppy is crying around feeding times, it might be a sign they are genuinely hungry or that their feeding schedule needs adjustment.

Calming Techniques for Anxious Puppies

When your puppy is crying due to loneliness or anxiety, these techniques can provide immediate comfort and build their confidence.

Gradual Desensitization to Being Alone

This is crucial for tackling separation anxiety. Start by leaving your puppy alone for very short periods – literally seconds at first. Step out of the room, close the door, and then immediately return. Gradually increase the duration as your puppy becomes more comfortable. Ensure you don't make a big fuss when you leave or return. This teaches them that your absence is temporary and not a cause for alarm. For more in-depth guidance, explore separation anxiety solutions.

White Noise and Calming Music

Just as white noise can help soothe human babies, it can also calm anxious puppies. A fan, a white noise machine, or even calming classical music can help drown out external noises that might be startling your puppy and create a more peaceful atmosphere. Many pet-specific calming playlists are available online.

The Power of Familiar Scents

Leaving an item of clothing that smells like you in your puppy's bed can provide a sense of comfort and familiarity. This "scent blanket" can remind them of your presence and ease their loneliness.

Chew Toys and Enrichment Activities

Boredom can lead to crying. Provide a variety of safe and engaging chew toys, such as KONGs stuffed with treats, puzzle toys, or Nylabones. Interactive toys that dispense treats can keep them occupied for longer periods. Engaging in play sessions and mental stimulation, like puppy enrichment activities, is vital for a happy and well-adjusted dog.

When to Seek Professional Help

While most puppy crying is manageable with consistent training and care, there are instances when professional guidance is necessary.

Veterinary Consultation

As mentioned earlier, if you suspect your puppy is crying due to pain, illness, or any medical issue, a prompt visit to your veterinarian is essential. They can diagnose and treat any underlying health problems and provide peace of mind.

Certified Professional Dog Trainer (CPDT)

If you're struggling to manage your puppy's crying, especially if it's related to severe separation anxiety or behavioral issues, consult a certified professional dog trainer. They can assess your specific situation, provide tailored training plans, and guide you through the process with expert advice. Look for trainers who use positive reinforcement methods, as these are most effective and humane for puppies.

The Long Game: Building Trust and a Strong Bond

Stopping puppy crying is not just about quieting the noise; it's about building a foundation of trust and security with your new companion. By understanding their needs, providing consistent care, and employing positive training methods, you'll not only reduce crying but also foster a lifelong bond. Remember that every puppy is an individual, and what works for one might need slight adjustments for another. Celebrate small victories, stay patient, and enjoy the journey of raising a happy, well-adjusted dog.

The transition from a litter of siblings to a new home is a significant leap for any puppy. Your understanding, patience, and consistent efforts will be instrumental in helping them navigate this change. By focusing on their emotional and physical well-being, you'll be well on your way to a peaceful coexistence and a lifetime of happy barks.

Files remain searchable, notes preserved, and insights easy to revisit. Learning feels cumulative rather than fragmented. Another subtle change appears in confidence. When readers know they can return at any time, pressure fades. Understanding develops gradually through repetition and reflection. Ideas settle more deeply when they are revisited rather than rushed. Global access adds richness to the experience. Readers from different cultures and backgrounds engage with the same material, often interpreting ideas through different lenses. This shared access broadens perspective and encourages thoughtful comparison. Exploration becomes easier when effort is low. Readers venture beyond familiar subjects, connecting ideas across disciplines. This cross-pollination strengthens creativity and critical thinking, allowing knowledge to grow organically. Long-term engagement becomes possible when resources remain available. Notes saved today support understanding tomorrow. Bookmarks placed months ago still guide attention. Learning stretches across time rather than resetting with each new resource. The role of books subtly shifts. Instead of being consumed once, they remain present. They wait patiently, ready to be reopened when curiosity returns. This availability transforms reading into an ongoing relationship rather than a single event. Digital literacy develops naturally through this interaction. Readers become comfortable managing files, evaluating sources, and navigating information. These skills extend beyond reading, supporting broader academic and professional competence. The appeal of downloading How To Stop Puppy Crying lies not only in convenience, but in how it supports sustainable learning habits. It aligns with real-life rhythms rather than idealized schedules. Learning becomes something that adapts to life, not something life must adjust for. As interests change, resources remain flexible. Readers return with new questions, different perspectives, and deeper curiosity. The same text offers new insights depending on context and experience. This adaptability supports lifelong learning. Knowledge does not stagnate when access remains constant. Instead, it grows alongside changing goals, responsibilities, and understanding. Books become quieter companions. They do not demand attention, yet remain available. They offer structure without pressure and depth without rigidity. Over time, these qualities shape mindset. Learning feels approachable. Curiosity feels welcomed. Understanding feels earned rather than forced. Accessing How To Stop Puppy Crying in this way reflects a broader shift in how people engage with information. It prioritizes continuity over completion, reflection over speed, and curiosity over obligation. Rather than marking an endpoint, each return to the text opens a new entry point. Ideas evolve, questions deepen, and understanding grows gradually. In this space, learning continues without announcement. It moves alongside daily life, responding to moments of interest, quiet reflection, and renewed curiosity. And in that steady presence, knowledge remains not as a destination, but as something that stays close, ready whenever it is needed.

Questions & Answers About how to stop puppy crying

No	Question	Answer
1	My new puppy cries all night! What's the fastest way to get them to settle down?	The key is patience and consistency. Start by creating a safe and cozy den (like a crate) in a quiet area. Make their last potty break right before bed. During the night, only let them out for essential potty breaks, and keep interactions minimal and quiet. Gradually increase the time they spend alone in their den during the day to help them build confidence.
2	Is my puppy crying because they're hungry, or do they just miss me?	Puppies cry for many reasons: hunger, thirst, needing to potty, loneliness, or even overstimulation. Rule out the basics first: ensure they've eaten, have fresh water, and have had a chance to relieve themselves. If those are met, it's likely loneliness. Try leaving a worn piece of your clothing in their bed for comfort. If it's constant crying, consult your vet to rule out any underlying medical issues.
3	I've tried everything, but my puppy STILL cries when I leave the room. How can I stop separation anxiety?	This sounds like early separation anxiety. Start by desensitizing your puppy to your departures. Begin with very short absences (a few seconds) and gradually increase the time. Make departures and arrivals low-key; don't make a big fuss. Leave them with a mentally stimulating toy, like a puzzle feeder, to distract them.
4	My puppy whines when I put them in their crate. Am I doing something wrong?	Crate training should be a positive experience. Ensure the crate is the right size and comfortable with soft bedding. Feed them meals inside the crate and offer high-value treats. Start with short periods and gradually increase the duration. Never use the crate as punishment. If they cry intensely, it might mean they're not ready for that duration yet, so try shorter sessions.
5	My puppy cries when I try to potty train them outside. What's the trick?	Puppies can cry outside due to fear of the unknown, weather, or simply not understanding the purpose. Ensure the potty spot is safe and accessible. Go out with them consistently, use a cue word, and reward them immediately with praise and a high-value treat when they go. Keep outings short and positive if they're reluctant.
6	My puppy is crying for attention. How do I teach them to be content alone for short periods?	This requires building independence. Provide plenty of physical and mental stimulation throughout the day so they're tired. When you're home, don't constantly cater to their every cry for attention. Practice 'chill time' where they are expected to relax. When they do settle, offer quiet praise or a small treat. Ensure their basic needs are met before you expect them to be quiet.

7	My puppy cries after playing and seems overstimulated. How can I help them calm down?	Overstimulation is common. Recognize the signs: excessive panting, zoomies, nipping, and whining. When you see these, it's time for a calm-down period. Gently guide them to their quiet space (crate or bed). Keep the environment low-key. Avoid further intense play until they've relaxed. This teaches them to self-regulate.
