A Family Legacy of Stories

Ford grew up in Seattle, a city that plays a central role in his novel. A pivotal moment in the development of "Hotel on the Corner of Bitter and Sweet" was Ford's discovery of his family's own connection to the Panama Hotel, the fictionalized setting of his novel. This historic hotel in Seattle's International District served as a repository for Japanese Americans' belongings during their forced internment. Ford's grandfather, a Chinese immigrant who operated a grocery store nearby, had a key to the hotel and would help look after the stored items.
